Since leaving Harvard I've been a graduate student in sociology at the University of California almost continuously. The interest in the Far East I developed as an undergraduate has narrowed to the population of China and so my studies in sociology have been of family, and kinship, urbanization, population theory and theory of social change, together with some work in demography. At the same time, I've gone on with Chinese studies, particularly of the language.

From 1958 to 1960 I was a fellow of the Center for Chinese Studies at the University of California and am currently editing an anthology of articles on the population of China, together with Carlo Cippola, to be published next year in Italy by Fertrenelli. Ellery and I have also been interested in film art, particularly the Japanese film, and have arranged for several series of Japanese films to be shown at the University.

ENJOYING life in the northwest, trying to understand the great cultural revolution, finding strategies for teaching students whose attitude towards knowledge is vastly different from ours, coping with supermarkets and tennis elbow; it's Modern Times! Philosophically, I am now a convinced Manichean. The photograph shows the forces of good in a moment of triumph. Good wishes to all.
